Council makes several recommendations on honorariums

Many dealing with transparency

BY PAUL FREY
 MVP Staff

Council members made several recommendations at the June 9 meeting to clarify the town's honorarium policy while making honorariums more transparent for the public.

The discussion was brought forward from a previous council meeting during which the topic was discussed but no resolutions were made.

Coun. Joyce McCoy, who suggested making honorariums more transparent for the public, said while she thought the current practice of posting staff and council member expenses on the town's website was good, more could be done to improve transparency.

"What's on the website right now isn't the best. Those scans are just not professional," she said, indicating that a spreadsheet like the one she showed council members at the meeting would be better.

McCoy said because there are few formal rules about what a councillor can charge for, some councillors are including all the time they spend on council business when calculating

"I really don't think we should feel bad about what we make. We all work hard."

their per diems. She suggested that staff clarify in the policy what council members can charge for and what should be included as part of their regular duties.

For example, she said that meeting with individual residents on a topic of concern to the resident shouldn't be charged for, nor should attendance at events such as parades or the newly implemented coffee-with-council chats. Attendance at meetings should be charged for, she said.

"The one that's bothered me the most is ... you (shouldn't) charge for sitting with residents. That's our job," she said.

Coun. Gail Nowlan said some of the discrepancy with council member claims results from the policy not clearly spelling out what claims and expenses should be made by members.

She supported the policy being more prescriptive to promote uniformity of claims.

McCoy said in light of Didsbury council members making the least of their council colleagues throughout municipalities in Mountain View County - councillors make $1,209 per month compared to Mountain View County councillors who top the list at $2,289 per month - council members shouldn't be shy about telling residents what they do to earn their money.

"I really don't think we should feel bad about what we make. We all work hard," she said.

Coun. Sheila Shulz said she thought that when a council member attends a public event such as a parade or a trade fair, they should include that in their per diem claims because if they didn't, Shulz thought many council members wouldn't show up to such events. McCoy disagreed.

"There's a certain amount of community engagement that is part of our job," she said.

Also discussed was requesting all boards and commissions that have their own per diem amounts that they give to representatives, disclose those to Town of Didsbury officials so they can be posted on the town's website to give a more accurate accounting of councillor remuneration.

Coun. Lavar Adams said while he raised this issue at a past meeting of the Mountain View Regional Water Services Commission, he said the commission doesn't release that information on a blanket basis. The commission only releases that information if the individual member agrees to such a request.

As part of the recommendations to town administrators, council members ratified a recommendation that they file claims and expenses electronically at regularly scheduled intervals and that the town's chief financial officer and mayor sign off on the claims to ensure accountability.

Councillors turn down meeting with library board

BY PAUL FREY
MVP Staff

Council members turned down a request from the Didsbury Municipal Library board to discuss a potential grant application to refurbish the existing library.

The decision was made at the June 9 meeting of town council.

Council members felt the timeline for the requested meeting – between the council meeting on June 9 and the application deadline of June 17 – was too tight for town representatives to formulate a plan on the library's application. While council members said they supported the library, there were too many variables that must be considered with the particular application if it went forward, and the timeline was too short, they said.

"As far as support for the library, we're 100 per cent behind the library," Coun. Garth Hollinger said.

Coun. Joyce McCoy said the type of plan that library officials are considering needs public consultation before town officials could throw support behind the plan.

Many councillors speculated that if the library's plan called for more space, necessitating the Town of Didsbury office to be moved out of its portion of the building, a long lead time would be required to find alternate accommodations. A suitable alternative hasn't been found yet.

"I think the community is entitled to (consultation)," McCoy said.

"To meet the deadline, it's almost impossible. Council is a long ways from making a decision," Roy Brown, the town's chief administrative officer, told council members.

With all of the other municipal projects being undertaken in the next while, Brown said that if the Town of Didsbury were to take on some form of financial responsibility with the library project, it could be burdened with too much financial responsibility.

Brown also said council members have had closed-door discussions regarding locations for a new library, municipal office and Didsbury After School Care Association facilities, but no decisions have been made at this point.

He also said an engineering review on the current town office-library needs to be made before any application to refurbish the building could be submitted.

"I just think it's too short a time period," Coun. Lavar Adams said.

Following the conclusion of the council discussion, Maia Foster, the chair of the library board, told council members she was disappointed with the tenor of the discussion she heard around the council table.

She said because she recently assumed chairmanship of the library board and had to get familiar with the grant application, she only recently became aware of the scope of the project. But she also said the library board needed council's support in order to proceed with the grant application.

Foster told council members that all of the issues that council members raised during the discussion could have been talked about with the library board following the board submitting an application.

"We have been trying to have our voices heard ... and I feel it's very unfortunate that you didn't allow us a voice," she said.

The Canada 150 Community Infrastructure Program is a federal government-administered grant that allows groups to access up to $500,000 per grant for infrastructure projects. The grant only applies to existing facilities, not new construction. Groups in Western Canada could apply for the program beginning on May 19.

Soap box derby brings out racers

Despite less than ideal conditions

BY PAUL FREY
MVP Staff

The annual soap box derby brought out 19 racers in the open, senior and junior divisions on June 13 on Highway 582.

The annual event, sponsored by the Didsbury Lions Club, had seven participants from the Lacombe 4-H Outsiders Multi-Club.

Sharyl James, a member of the Lions Club who helped organize the race, said many of the participants use the Didsbury race as a warm-up for a circuit of soap box races throughout the province.

James said this year some of the schools in Didsbury built cars as a class project and then entered the races to test out their cars.

"We had a group of kids at (Didsbury schools) make their own cars this year and they had (class members) come out to support them. We've had different schools participate (through the years) and we really like to see schools participate. We've had a good showing from Reed Ranch School ... over the years," James said.

"There's quite a few that watch (one year, and enter the next)," she said.

Carson McCulloch, 12, participated in his first race this year and built his car as a school project.

"It's a great experience to drive your own cart," he said, adding that while it took about a month to build his car, he had fun doing it.

"It takes some time to get the parts and build the car," he said.

Gina Wrigley, also 12, said she had a few nerves when she started racing, but after a couple of times down the track, she found it a good experience.

"At first I was nervous but after the first time I did it, it was fun. (I was nervous) because I'd never done it before and it was a really steep ramp," she said.

Wrigley said while it took awhile to build her car, she had fun doing it.

Camryn Hutchinson, who was one of the Lacombe participants, talked to the Review after her third run down the track. She said she enjoyed racing her friends down the track.

"It's awesome," she said, noting she came to the derby and raced in 2013.

Justin Campbell, aged nine, participated in his first derby on June 13. He had gone down the track four times before the Review spoke to him.

"It's good. I really like it and I think more people should try it," he said.

Watching other racers go down the road last year, Campbell said since new pavement was laid on the highway it is a much smoother ride.

"It's not bumpy anymore. Last year it was really bumpy, but they put new pavement (on the road), so it's much better," he said.

Didsbury honours local seniors for contributions

BY PAUL FREY
MVP Staff

More than 150 people turned out on June 11 at the multi-purpose room to honour seniors and their many contributions to building the community over the decades.

The event was in conjunction with Seniors' Week, held June 1 to 7. As part of the event, Coun. Garth Hollinger made a few comments on behalf of council members and town staff to recognize seniors for all their hard work in volunteering and working to build the province.

Lois Wright of Didsbury Senior Support Services (DSSS), which helped organize the function, said it was a small way the group could acknowledge all the hard work seniors have done over the years to help the community and the province.

"Through their tenacity and perseverance, they built our province to what it is today," she said.

The event marked the conclusion of events DSSS holds from September until June each year. Every Thursday afternoon during that time, seniors gather at the train station to socialize, take in various guest speakers on topics such as elder abuse and financial scams that target seniors.

"We also have a number of board games that seniors play. They (practice) problem solving with board games," Wright said.

Wright said she hopes that DSSS will begin offering more programs to local seniors beginning in the fall, once they are approved by the board of directors.

Opinion

Commentary Cut expenses before services

BY SIMON DUCATEL
MVP Staff

A propaganda photo of our inspirational leader presents him standing immaculately centred in front of a giant Canadian flag so monstrously large not even half of it fits in the frame.

Aside from flagrant posturing, the necessity of such an oversized flag is bewildering.

It serves no purpose, other than to aggrandize the prime minister, and further represents one of Big Brother's biggest problems.

Over bloating and senseless expenses.

Such large flags cost anywhere from hundreds of dollars to a thousand or more.

Meanwhile, many Canadians are scraping by on about that much every two weeks.

The Canadian Payroll Association recently found that 51 per cent of respondents said in a survey they would be up the proverbially unpleasant creek without a paddle if their paycheck was delayed just one week. That's up three per cent from several years before. It must be the "recovery" hard at work.

The thought of a hard-working individual's paycheck being roughly equivalent to some needless, gargantuan flag is nauseating. If the display served some greater purpose for Canadians or even humanity, it would at least be understandable. What was the hope, that other countries would like or respect us more if we put a monumental flag on display?

It's been said taxpayers are glad when their money is well invested and put to productive use — at least ideally they should be. It's when their money is wasted they'll take issue.

Needlessly excessive expenses in government are pervasive — there are now recently released reports pointing out government workers are getting paid almost 10 per cent more than their equivalent counterparts in the private sector.

This seems a turnaround of times when government jobs paid less but offered long-term stability while private sector jobs offered higher salaries but less or even no security in the long run.

It was a trade-off.

Before the government decides to start cutting back on health and education, as well as the environment, it should first and foremost look to cut its own generous salaries and lavish expenses. Government workers shouldn't be making so much more than private sector workers who do comparable jobs.

To be fair, there's also a large responsibility on us to live within our means.

Signing up for a new credit card when another one has been maxed is not sound financial strategy.

It was reported months ago by many news outlets that Canadians' debt to income ratio hit a new high at 163.3 per cent. Simply put, that's earning $100 for roughly every $163 owed.

It could be time to reconsider how many wide-screen televisions we really need and whether we need to replace smartphones every year.

It would just be more encouraging if our leaders actually, well, led by example.

Commentary Live organ appeals beneficial

BY JENNIFER CHANDLER

The public response to the appeal on behalf of Eugene Melnyk, owner of the Ottawa Senators hockey team, for a liver donor has been a heart-warming demonstration of the generosity of our community. Fortunately, a donor was found and the transplant was performed in time to save his life.

But is it fair that he received a donation when many others are waiting, and dying, on the wait-list for a transplant? This is one of the common themes in the commentary about it in the news.

It is entirely understandable for those in desperate need to give up on the wait-list for a deceased donor and to reach out to their friends and family, and, if they are able to do so, to the public to find a live donor. There is perhaps an inescapable unfairness in all such appeals for live donors. Those with larger families and social circles may have a higher chance of locating a suitable donor. As for appeals to the public, those with wealth, fame, charisma or a particularly compelling story are likely to do better than those without these attributes because they are more appealing to the public or because they have better access to the means of effective mass communication.

Although some are critical of public appeals for live organ donors, it is important to note that refraining from launching these appeals does nothing to help anyone. In fact, it may actually harm both people like Mr. Melnyk who hope to find a donor as well as others on the wait-list. There are several ways in which public appeals to help one specific individual might indirectly benefit others waiting for a transplant.

When the topic of organ donation and transplantation attracts the public's attention, as it did recently, more people tend to register their willingness to donate after death and to speak to their families about donation. This benefits everyone by increasing the availability of organs from deceased donors.

It is important to remember that wealth and fame do not play a role in the allocation of organs from deceased donors in Canada, even if these factors might offer a platform from which to launch more successful appeals for live donors.

Second, some of those who have come forward to help Mr. Melnyk may be willing to help one of the other unknown Canadians facing a similarly desperate plight. In other words, Mr. Melnyk's public appeal may well save the lives of others who are less well-placed than he to command public attention.

According to the most recent annual statistics from the Canadian Institute for Health Information, 374 Canadians were awaiting a liver transplant in 2012. In the same time period, 111 in need of a liver transplant died or were removed from the wait-list. It is hard not to notice that in only a couple of days, 2,000 people responded to the appeal on Mr. Melnyk's behalf, and more than 500 sent in donor applications. This level of support could go a long way toward meeting the need for liver transplants in Canada.

The ideal outcome in this case is a healthy recovery for Mr. Melnyk and for the person who donated to him, as well as — and as important — spillover benefits for the many others awaiting a transplant.

It is in our hands as members of the public to act to help the many unknown Canadians who are living among us desperately but quietly and anonymously awaiting a transplant. If we are troubled that the overwhelming response to celebrity appeals for live donors leaves these others unaided, there are steps we can take to help them too. It is a simple matter to register to donate after one's death.

Former MLA wins lottery

Plans to buy a corvette and help grandchildren with education

BY JOSEPH HO
MVP Staff

Former Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills MLA Bruce Rowe is $1 million richer after winning the May 22 LOTTO MAX draw.

In a release from the Western Canada Lottery

Corporation, Rowe and his wife Carol bought their ticket in Calgary, picking the numbers: 16, 19, 20, 21, 25, 33, and 47.

Rowe is quoted saying he plans to buy a 1965 Corvette and to help with his grandchildren's education.

Earlier this year, Rowe decided to retire from politics. He was first elected as a Wildrose party MLA in 2012 before crossing the floor to the Progressive Conservatives in December, as one of nine Wildrose MLAs to go over to the conservative side of the benches.

The riding swung back to the Wildrose after Nathan Cooper won last month's election.

Colts golf tournament brings together past, present players

BY PAUL FREY

Seventy-two past and present players, along with team officials from the Mountain View Colts took to the Didsbury Golf Course on June 13 for the annual golf tournament.

The best-ball format was won by the team of Curtis Smith, Gaige Weseen, Cole Robertson and Drew Kocur with an 18-hole score of 62.

"It started a few years ago as an alumni tournament to get some of the past players out and it's just progressed from that. It's just a fun day," said Brent Youngs, the team's assistant coach and a member of the Colts' first-ever team 25 years ago.

Weseen said the tournament is a good opportunity to see past teammates and others in a fun atmosphere.

"It's good to see the guys come back. It's a great time to meet up with everybody and keep in touch. We don't keep up as much as we could, but we do get together for this tournament, which is really nice," he said.

Weseen was a member of the team for two seasons from 2011-2013.

Weseen said his team hit a few good shots when needed, and were able to pace the field.

"We all hit good shots, we all hit bad shots, but it just seemed to come together and we ended up posting a good score," he said.

Kocur, a member of last year's Colts team who made it to the Heritage Junior Hockey League semifinal, was the lone representative of last year's team to play on the winning four-ball tournament on June 13. He said he had a good time playing with former Colts.

"It was a lot of fun. I came all the way out here from Regina and I got to see some of the guys again as well as the (former players), had some fun and won the trophy," he said.

Kocur will be returning for the upcoming season and is looking forward to building on the momentum the team generated from the playoffs in February and March.

"We put a big run together and we ... pushed through against Airdrie and we went to the (semifinals) there. It was a tough way to go out in four but I felt we had a good run. I think we have a good team and we'll have a lot of the same guys back (this season)," he said.

Weightlifter sets two national records

BY PAUL FREY
MVP Staff

Local weightlifter Tate Beasley recently set two national records while attending his first-ever competition in Calgary on June 7 in Calgary.

Beasley successfully completed a squat lift of 158.4 kilograms and a deadlift of 212 kilograms, setting national records for each lift in the 16- to 17-year-old 74-kilogram weight class. Beasley competed against eight other lifters in his weight class at the 100 per cent RAW Powerlifting Federation competition.

"Actually going in and competing and having people watch you is way more intense. It kind of gives you more drive and focus," he said.

Beasley watched other competitors on June 6 to get a sense of what competing might be like.

Beasley said most lifters like to compete against themselves, training and bettering themselves and trying to beat personal bests as opposed to competing against other lifters.

"It's not really a competition with other people. It's a competition with yourself. Between the three lifts that you do (in a particular discipline) you get a total weight and in your next powerlifting meet your objective is to beat that weight, so it's more just bettering yourself," he said.

Beasley said he found the atmosphere at the competition encouraging.

"All the other fellow lifters, they're really inspirational. They're lifting big weights, they help you out, they compliment you, they want to make sure you do good as well," he said.

Beasley, who plans on attending another competition later this summer, said he learned that the competitions are a good way to meet others interested in the sport.

"It's a fun time. It's a good way to get to know new people. It's a good hobby if you enjoy physical activity," he said.
